SPN, Castiel, how he will use in heaven what he has learned on earth

That's pure silliness, right there.

___

The day Heaven's new sheriff decreed that every angel must take two hours of their life and watch Ghostbusters, most to all of the angels thought he was crazy.

All of the angels obeyed, though, what with Castiel's firmly insistent way of ordering Heaven around, and his way of insisting that it was a human-recommended way to learn about humanity without actually going down there, and so soon all of Heaven's angels were hearing the Ghostbuster tune for the first time.

Except for Gabriel. "Seen it three times already, I don't need to see it again, right Cas?"

Castiel agreed, after one heart stopping staredown, and handed Gabriel the other movie he had returned to Heaven with (after an extensive questioning of Dean, Sam, and a Walmart clerk on humanity and its movies): The Lion King.